JOHN ROCK SMITH, the original ancestor of this family in America, is first recorded as having settled in Connecticut and then to have joined with others in the founding of the Long Island community of Hempstead. "Long Island Genealogies", by Mary Powell Bunkor, says "John Rock Smith, in Stamford, Conn., in 1640, at Hempstead, L. I. in 1644, says that at Stamford he was called John Rock for distinction. There were several John Smiths in the settlement". Those facts, as well as the year of his birth, are also to be found in the "Genealogical Dictionary of the First Settlers of New England". From the latter record it appears, in Volume 4, page 119, that in a deposition made by John Rock Smith in 1675, he gave his age as 60 years. It thus is established that he was born in 1615 and the Hempstead records, which show he died in 1706, also record that his long life was spent in an active enterprising manner, surrounded by neighbors and friends who were ever ready to transact business with him and hold him in good esteem.

Legends have two versions of how John Smith acquired the distinguishing name of "Rock"; in one it is said that in building his house he utilized a large natural rock formation as part of the foundation. The other version has it that the large rock formed the back of his fireplace. Whatever may have been the cause, the result was that he became known as John Rock Smith of Hempstead.

Little is known of John Rock Smith prior to his arrival in America, but it is apparent that he identified himself, in Connecticut, with the Rev. Richard Denton who arrived in this country in the 1630's and, according to Cotton Mather, came from Halifax, in Yorkshire. Denton preached in America, first at Westfield and later at Stamford Conn., at which place a John Rock Smith appears to have lived from 1640 to about 1643.

The "History of Stamford Connecticut", by E. B. Huntington, says "Denton, his four sons and seven others, founded Stamford and they later became founders of the Long Island community. Nine others soon arrived who also later moved to Hempstead, most of them as original settlers; Thomas Armitage, John Ogden, John Coo, Simon Scaring, John Ellis, Rev. Robert Fordham, his son-in-law, John Carman and John Smith and his son, John Smith Jr."

John Rock Smith, from the story of his life, appears to have been a man of many parts. He was Judge, farmer, land owner and apparently innkeeper, as the first recorded permit for the operation of a tavern was granted to John Rock Smith, in 1659, and in May 1672, Mr. John Rock Smith, together with a Mr. Osborne, were appointed by the Governor to learn, by inquiry of the Indians and the residents near the South Shore, when any whales should be cast up.

In the year 1667, a second patent to the Town of Hempstead was granted to John Rock Smith, John Hicks, John Soaman, Richard Gildersleeve, Robert Jackson, Jonas Pina, John Carman, and John Smith Blue. This patent, issued March 19, 1666. This second patent gave to Hempstead a part of the Matinecock lands as soon as they should be purchased from the Indians.
While it is stated that the name of the wife of John Rock Smith does not appear in any of the deeds or exchanges of land or in his will, the "Descendants of Edward Trodwell" by Wm. A. Robbins, (N. Y. Genealogical and Biographical Record, Vol. 42) gives the name of the wife of John Rock Smith as Hannah Murra. (John Rock Smith's daughter, Hannah, married John Trodwell) His sons are frequently mentioned in the records, sometimes disposing of property jointly with their father.

In his will which was dated May 10, 1695 and probated April 3, 1706, John Rock Smith disposes of his estate. In a prior will, dated May 20, 1690, he mentioned having been left a widower.

John Rock Smith died in the homestead in Merrick, Hempstead township, Queens County, (now Nassau County,) Long Island, New York in 1706.

Adam Smith lived in what was then Hempstead South also called Raynor South, or Raynortown, his house being located south of Mill Read and east of the Freeport Creek, in what in later years became known as Turks Island. Mill Read, extended easterly, to the Hempstead or Babylon Turnpike, which was the highway connecting the communities east and west.

Adam Smith enlisted as a private in the Levies commanded by Col. Marine Willett. He was buried in the Presbyterian Cemetery, Hempstead, N. Y. Through the effects of the S. A. R. the Government erected a marker over his grave.
The name of Raynor Rock Smith and the account of his daring rescue of eight of the passengers and crew of the ill-fated ship "Mexico", may be found in most of the histories of Long Island and in many of the books devoted to the genealogies of early Long Island families. Probably the best account of this event, and the most intimate picture of the character and calibre of the man, appears in that very interesting book, "Personal Reminiscence of Men and Things on Long Island", by Daniel Tredwell, for Daniel Tredwell was his friend and fellow townsman and knew him well.

Tredwell in page 119 of part I of his "Personal Reminiscences" recites briefly the details of the disaster which befell the barque "Mexico", a ship of 300 tons burden, and the loss of all but eight of the one hundred and twelve passengers and the crew of eighteen, when she came ashore on Long Beach in the bitterly cold weather of January 2, 1837. Tredwell in refining to the disaster says, "The unparalleled heroism displayed by Raynor Rock in the efforts to save the lives of the unfortunate passengers and crew of the barque, Mexico, at the risk of his own life, he, commanding one of the bravest crews that ever manned a surf boat, will be immortalized in the history and records of the great disasters of the Long Island Coast."

With a crew composed of Zaphar Smith, William Curtis Smith, James Smith, and two named Oliver Smith, all members of his family and three of them, Zaphar, James, and Oliver, his own sons, Raynor Rock Smith, in spite of the almost insurmountable difficulties of gale, raging sea and zero weather, manned a surf boat and attempted the rescue of the otherwise doomed souls on the barque. After the most exhausting effort the ship was reached and eight of the passengers and crew finally brought safely to the beach. Further attempts to reach the stricken vessel proved unavailing and finally had to be abandoned.

Tredwell recalls seeing the bodies of the drowned and frozen victims brought from the beach in sleds and placed in rows in John Latts' barn awaiting identification by friends and relatives. He recalls "the funeral, consisting of fifty two farm wagons carrying the boxes containing the bodies of the dead."

Tredwell says of Raynor Rock Smith in referring to a testimonial arranged for him that "he was the most modest and unassuming man that ever lived" and that "Everybody here knows Raynor Rock Smith and all are familiar with the many brave and noble acts in the service of humanity accredited to him. But in his super human efforts on behalf of the passengers and crew of the ill-fated "Mexico" his fame reached beyond his immediate neighborhood; his efforts affected the state and nation. Citizens of New York saw this and hence this public recognition." Continuing Tredwell says, "On the 25 of March 1837, less than three months after the "Mexico" calamity and less than two months after the entombment of the victims at Rockville Centre, a committee of gentlemen from the City of New York, composed of William J. Hawes, Joseph Meeks, John Horspool, Lawrence Ackerman, William Kellog and Benjamin Ringold, met Raynor Rock and his friends by appointment at the hotel of Oliver Conklin in Hempstead for the purpose of presenting him, Raynor Rock, with a token of regard (a silver tennard) in commemoration of his services to humanity."

Mr. Tredwell says a simple entertainment followed, prepared by the friends of Mr. Smith, in which about thirty participated.

Raynor Rock Smith died Oct. 3, 1869 and is buried in Greenfield Cemetery, Nassau County, N. Y. his body and that of his second wife, Elizabeth Dixon, having been removed from the Presbyterian Churchyard, in Freeport, N. Y.

The presentation took place at four o'clock in the afternoon in the hall of the hotel in the presence of a large audience of New Yorkers, South Siders, and many villagers.

On the arrival of the committee from New York, the meeting was formerly called to order and organized by the appointment of John Simmscai as Chairman. The object of the meeting was read and William J. Hawes delivered an address in presenting the cup. Mr. Hawes said, impart:

"Mr. Chairman, Citizens of Hempstead" and, turning to Raynor Smith, said:

"We are a committee appointed by the citizens of the Fifth Ward of the City of New York to discharge the difficult task of expressing to you their admiration of your chivalrous attempt to rescue the passengers and crew of the barque "Mexico", lately stranded on the adjacent beach, and to ask your acceptance of a token of their regard for your intrapidity. Having awaited in vain for the recognition of your services in a more general and distinguished manner, we have felt that we owe it to our city, to the credit of our state and country, so far as in our power lies, to express to your the sentiment we entertain of your perilous adventure."

After a vivid description of the rescue and its perils and difficulties, Mr. Hawes continued:

"The city knows the fact, the commercial Christian world knows thru fact, and the press the length and breadth of the country have heralded your heroism and hazardous endeavors. We propose a simple but more tangible and lasting testimonial that you and your children may contemplate with pride."

Mr. Hawes referred to the national honors frequently bestowed, in other countries, for far less daring exploits, and said: "This reward we cannot give you, but such as your fellow countrymen can give of gratitude to one who has rendered honor to the state, such as we bestow. These we yield, these we bring in tribute, that your children and the children of your brave boys may not complain that Americans cannot appreciate acts of devotion and danger, and that your distant posterity may have preserved among them a glorious example of their ancestors, we have caused a skillful artist to engrave upon silver a faint sketch of your achievement upon this cup, which I now tender to your acceptance, is embossed the story of the ill-fated "Mexico" and the glory of Raynor Rock Smith. In tendering to you, sir, this token of our regard, we do not expect greatly to add to your honor, nor to increase the esteem in which you must be held by every man who appreciates virtuous heroism."

In concluding Mr. Hawes said:

"None can know better than I know, how well this tribute is bestowed. I have had the enjoyment of your acquaintance for many years and have witnessed more than one instance of your skill and courage."

Mr. Hawes referred to the rescue by Raynor Rock Smith on a previous occasion, of Captain Nathan Holdridge and said:

"For him and for all the other lives you have saved to the republic, we thank you, and we pray that your valuable life may be spared, if not to act in future cases of distress, to teach and encourage your sons and grandsons how to earn esteem on earth and a worthy welcome into heaven."
102. AMANDA M. 8 SMITH, born 1841; died March 26, 1926; married Isaac Newton Carman.

107. ANNIE A. 8 SMITH, born April 7, 1860; died Feb. 6, 1942. She was unmarried. Prior to her death in 1942, Mill Smith was the oldest living female descendant of John Rock Smith and of Edward Raynor, her original ancestors in the Smith and Raynor lines, in this country, both of whom were among the original settlers of Hempstead. Edward Raynor later becoming the founder of Raynortown, now Freeport, LIL N. Y. Miss Smith was born in the farm house of her father, described in these pages, and died in the house her father built at what is now the south east corner of Washburn Ave. and North Main St. about a block from the place of her birth. She lived all her life on the land of her father and survived and died, as for three hundred years her forebears had lived and died, within five miles of the place of settlement of her original ancestors in this country. Sometimes prior to her death, Miss Smith received a citation from the Post.

The Post awarded her a medal that was presented at Borough Hall, Brooklyn, N. Y. She was a member of the Ruth Floyd Woodhull, Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution. She made a large American Flag by hand, during the Spanish American War.

William Rock 7 Smith, the youngest son of Raynor Rock Smith and his first wife, Ruth Whaley was, like his forebears, a tiller of the soil and a follower of both sea and bay. To these occupations he added a third— the building of ships.

His farm was located on both sides of what is now North Main Street, in the Village of Freeport, extending for a considerable distance to the east and west of that street and running to Seaman Ave. on its northern boundary.

His home, a substantial house of many rooms, was one of those pleasing old homesteads, typical of early Long Island, built facing the south, gable end to the road. In front the old house faced a shaded lawn extending to the orchard, just beyond. This fine old house with its four great chimneys and large central hall, might well have been saved for posterity, but with the death of Mary Frost Smith, the widow of William Rock Smith, the farm was sold and divided into building lots. The old house was cut apart and made into a number of dwellings which still stand on several of the streets which were cut through the property.

The setting of William Rock Smith shipyard was most unusual. The shipyard, together with his shop, was located on the east side of the road, opposite his home. This location was more than a mile from any water in which the boats he built could be launched. Those boats, schoops, schooners, were built to the south of his shop, their bowsprits frequently reaching far out over the road. When completed they were moved down the main street of the village, for a distance of a mile or more, and launched in Freeport Creek. The method used to move the boats was similar to that employed in moving a house from one location to another.

Among the boats built by William Rock Smith were the "Democrat", "Annis A.", "Enterprise", "Mary R.", and "Walter R.". Of these boats the "Annis R." and the "Enterprise" are said to be still in service.

William Rock Smith was a man of high ideals, clear thinking and keen judgment, who possessed an unavailing reputation among friends and neighbors for honesty and fair dealing. In the latter years of his life he was affectionately known, to young and old alike, as "Daddy Bill", a name by which he is still remembered and one which is indicative of the regard in which he was held.

At the time of his marriage, in 1838, Freeport, and the adjacent territory, was still somewhat primitive and remote. His bride-to-be, Mary Frost, was born in Babylon, Long Island, but at the time of their marriage was living in Christian Hook, now known as Oceanside, L. I. Their trip to the parsonage of St. George's Episcopal Church Hempstead, where the marriage ceremony was performed, was made on horseback and that evening, which was Christmas Eve, they attended "Watch Night" service in the old Sand Hill Church, on Merrick Road in what is now Rockville Centre, N. Y.

The homestead of William Rock Smith was located on the west side of the present North Main Street at what is now the northwest corner of North Main St. and West Dean St., and his shop was on the opposite side of the road, the south end of the building extending to and occupying the south east corner of North Main St. and East Dean St. A brick building containing stores and apartments is now on this site, the Star Baking Company occupying one of the stores. The plant of the Columbian Brssc Corp., situated on the east side of North Main St. at East Millston Street, occupies a part of the old barn and south and east of this location and north east of the old shop, the land sloped away to a tree-shaped pond, an attractive place in summer and the Mecca for skaters in winter. No trace of shop or pond remains today and the large willows which shaded the pond were cut down and became part of the fill used to bring this land to grade. Dwellings now occupy the site of the old pond and another attractive spot has become a memory.

William Rock Smith died Sept. 17, 1893 and his wife, Mary Frost Smith, died June 7, 1906. They are both buried in Greenfield Cemetery, Town of Hempstead, Nassau County, N. Y.
